Alumni Center Fund Reaches $1 Million

Executive Director of Alumni & Development Jerry F. Smith and his staff had a goal of $1 million by May 16, the date of the Alumni Board Meeting. However, they reached it 23 days early and as The Alumnews goes to press the total stands at $1,026,000. Gifts and pledges have come from Alumni, friends, and Auburn Clubs. Other alumni and Life Members are invited to go ahead and make their gifts and pledges as soon as possible.

"We would like to see the goal completed so that we can begin construction next fall," said Mr. Smith of the facility which is being designed by Joe Donofrio and Associates of Dothan. Phi Kappa Tau will be moving to its new quarters in the summer, and site preparation can begin in June.

Although current fundraising activities are concentrating on Life Members, all alumni will be asked to contribute to the Center fund drive. Each alumnus who gives $500 or more will have his or her name, or the name of the person whom he or she chooses to honor or memorialize, permanently displayed on the building. Gifts can be made in installments of $100 per year over five years.

The fund is being headed by Robert D. Word '55 of Scottsboro, president of the Alumni Association and chairman of the Alumni Center Fund Drive. Honorary Co-chairmen are Roy B. Sewell '22 of Bremen, Ga., John Stein '86 of Montgomery, and Molly Lindsey '85 of Boston, Mass.

Auburn To Help Save India's Forests

In the next three years, the School of Forestry hopes to export its expertise to India to help that country grow trees in poor soil. The project has been compared to helping reclaim depleted cotton land in the South following the civil war and the renewal of northern Alabama soils following strip mining.

Supported through an $495,000 contract with the Winrock International Institute for Agricultural Development, which is in turn a part of the Agency for International Development, the Auburn project will involve postdoctoral training at Auburn for 11 Indian scientists as well as cooperative research in India and the United States, technical assistance to researchers and resource managers in India, and nursery technology workshops in India.

"Global tropical deforestation is increasing at an alarming rate," said project director Robert K. Dixon, associate professor of forestry. "Each year, approximately 12 million hectares [a hectare is 2.47 acres] of the earth's tropical forests are cleared and converted to other land uses. To support the food, fuel, and fiber needs of a rapidly growing population of over 800 million people living on about one-half the land area of the U.S., India views its forests as a renewable resource. India's forests project watersheds and modulate seasonal flooding, as well as provide wood products, medicine, food, fiber, fuel and other basic human needs."

Mason Marvel of the Office of International Programs explains that the India project "is a two-way street. We will be helping the people of India improve their fuelwood technology and we will create a dialogue with India scientists. We'll be able to apply some of what we learned from them to our situation here."

First Auburn Woman Astronaut Visits Campus in April

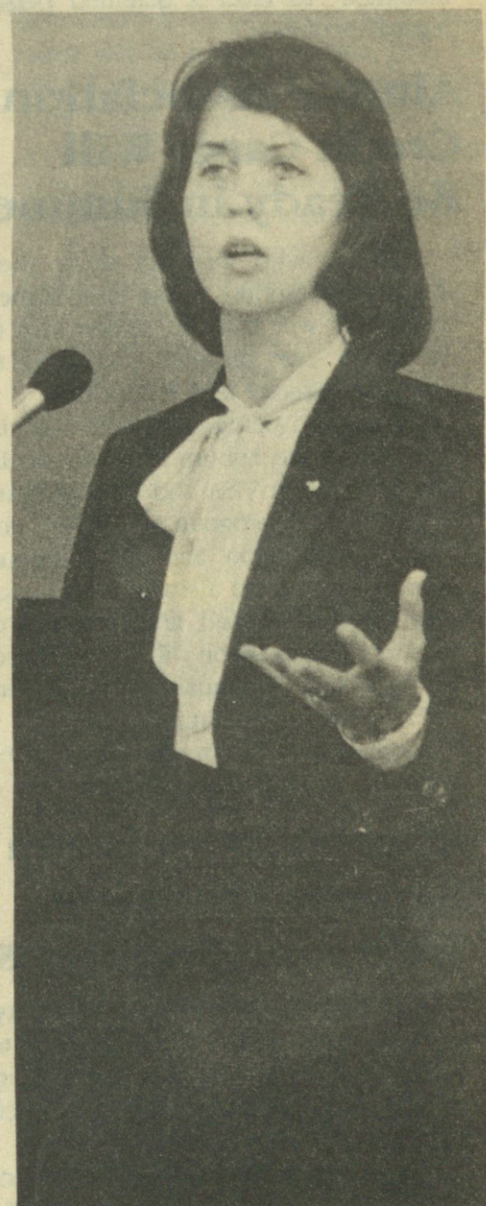

Kathryn Cordell Thornton '74, Auburn's first woman astronaut and the fourth Auburn graduate to be named to the astronaut corps, paid a two-day visit to campus in April, meeting press, faculty, and students.

Speaking to her Auburn audience, Dr. Thornton said that though NASA has slowed its schedule and improved procedures before space flights "there will always be risks."

Visiting classrooms and laboratories and talking with students as a part of her on-campus visit, Dr. Thornton said she hopes that the space program will inspire students to study math, science, and engineering, but urged students to do "a good job at whatever you choose."

Dr. Thornton, whose degree from Auburn is in physics, which she says she chose because she didn't know what she wanted for a career and it was the "most difficult," was on her first visit back to campus since entering the astronaut training program three years ago. She commented on the increased cars and fast food restaurants and noted that running into one of the approximately 800 Auburn alumni involved in the space program is like a family reunion. Before joining the space program, where she expects to be a mission specialist on future Space Shuttle flight crews, Dr. Thornton earned a master's and Ph.D. in physics from the University of Virginia. Following post doctoral work on a NATO fellowship at the Max Planck Institute for Nuclear Physics in Heidelberg, W.Germany, she worked as a physicist with the Army Foreign Science and Technology Center in Virginia.

Students Elect 1st Black President

Harold Melton made history in April when he became the first black student to be elected president of the Student Government Association. Although black students had served in several SGA functions in earlier years and Melton himself had been active in SGA during his career at Auburn, a black student had not held an elected SGA office since Anthony Copeland was vice president in the early 70s.

According to a Plainsman story, Harold received 3,468 votes of the 5,388 cast for president. A senior in international business, the new SGA president will serve as an ex-officio member of the Auburn Board of Trustees.

With fewer than 700 black students on the Auburn campus, Harold garnered the support of a large number of white students including fraternity support, which is usually required for success in student campaigns at Auburn. His biggest greek support came from the all-white lamda Chi Alpha fraternity, which sponsored a campaign rally for him and boasted his campaign signs on fraternity house lawn and on members' cars.

Auburn President James E. Martin praised all three candidates for the SGA presidency and the Auburn student body's readiness "to elect a qualified person regardless of race."

Alumni Association Credit Cards Will Be Ready in Summer

Alumni who want to show their allegiance to Auburn in the form of their credit card will have an opportunity to do so by late summer, according to Executive Director Jerry F. Smith '64.

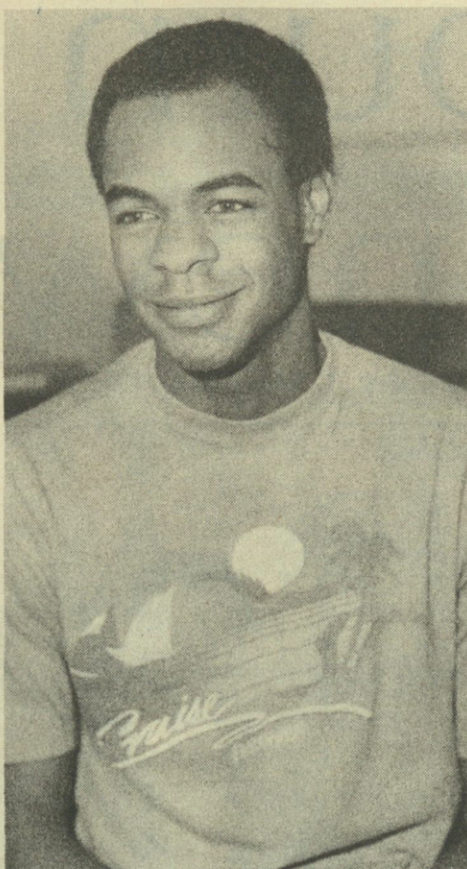

Through an arrangement with Colonial BancGroup, the Auburn Alumni Association will offer a VISA and/or Mastercard to alumni. The program will benefit the Alumni Association and the alumnus. Auburn will receive a small benefit each time the card is used, and members of the Alumni Association will benefit by not having to pay an annual fee for the card and by a low annual financial rate.

Applications for credit cards will be mailed to alumni in late summer.

Alumni Association Renews Tradition With June Reunions

Back around the turn of the century, the old grads used to come home to Auburn in June for a week of re-unioning, speechifying, and hobnobbing with each other.

Over the years the emphasis on alumni reunions gradually got changed to fall and football season. As the University grew, so did the numbers of people tied up in advisory councils and various groups, and the class reunions seemed to be missing something.

Consequently the Auburn Alumni Association decided this summer to return to an old Auburn tradition—reunions in June. But instead of hearing politicians, sermons, and other orations, the alumni can bring their families, stay on campus long enough to see how it is, meet some Auburn faculty, have time to really catch up with old friends, and learn something new, all in one long weekend.

"We've put together a package of activities for the entire family, and for every age this summer," explained Betty McLendon DeMent '71, associate director in charge of alumni activities. "Alumni will begin arriving on June 18 and stay four days. They can live in dorms or in motels. They can bring their children and have a chance to really see the campus and each other. As well as having fun, they can learn a little too. All of us who are involved in alumni programs are very excited about the plans for this summer and the response from alumni indicates they are too."

Alumni from the Classes of 1942, 1947, 1952, 1957, 1962, 1967, 1972, and 1977 will be coming back this summer, according to Christi Stacy Clowdus '80, assistant director who is organizing the activities for the reunion. Reunion reservations are now being taken and those who want to participate in seminars should let the Alumni Association know immediately that they're coming.

The seminars will range from a talk about integrity in college sports from the president of the NCAA, Dr. Wilford Bailey '42, to a discussion of the Auburn Archives with Dr. Dwayne Cox, to learning more about yourself and your family with Dennis Drake '69 of Student Development Services. Wayne Shell '52, head of Auburn's world famous Department of Fisheries and Allied Aquaculture, will be talking about his department and giving a tour of the fisheries ponds. Other opportunities will include learning about Creek Indian Archeology with Dr. J. Cottier '64 and touring the Vet School with Dr. H.C. Morgan '55.

In addition to campus tours, dinners, class pictures, class receptions etc., the reunion participants will meet the War Eagle VI, Auburn's newest mascot, and the university coaching staff at the stadium for a get-acquainted session. Later those interested in a little help with the golf or tennis can attend special clinics.

All members of the classes have been sent information about hotel and dorm reservations as well as information about the reunion activities, and it's time to the Alumni Association know you're coming.

Alumni Directory Moving Forward

Alumni who wonder whatever happened to their old friends who never sent any news to The Alumnews will have a chance to find out with Auburn's planned Alumni Directory. According to Bernice C. Harris Publishing Co., Inc., questionnaires will be mailed this summer to each alumnus, with a followup questionnaire coming to those who haven't answered by the end of a month.

The directory, which will be published in the summer of 1988, will include information about the university as well as class year information and special listings of alumni by city, state, and country.

First Astronauts To Live In Space May be in Auburn Environment

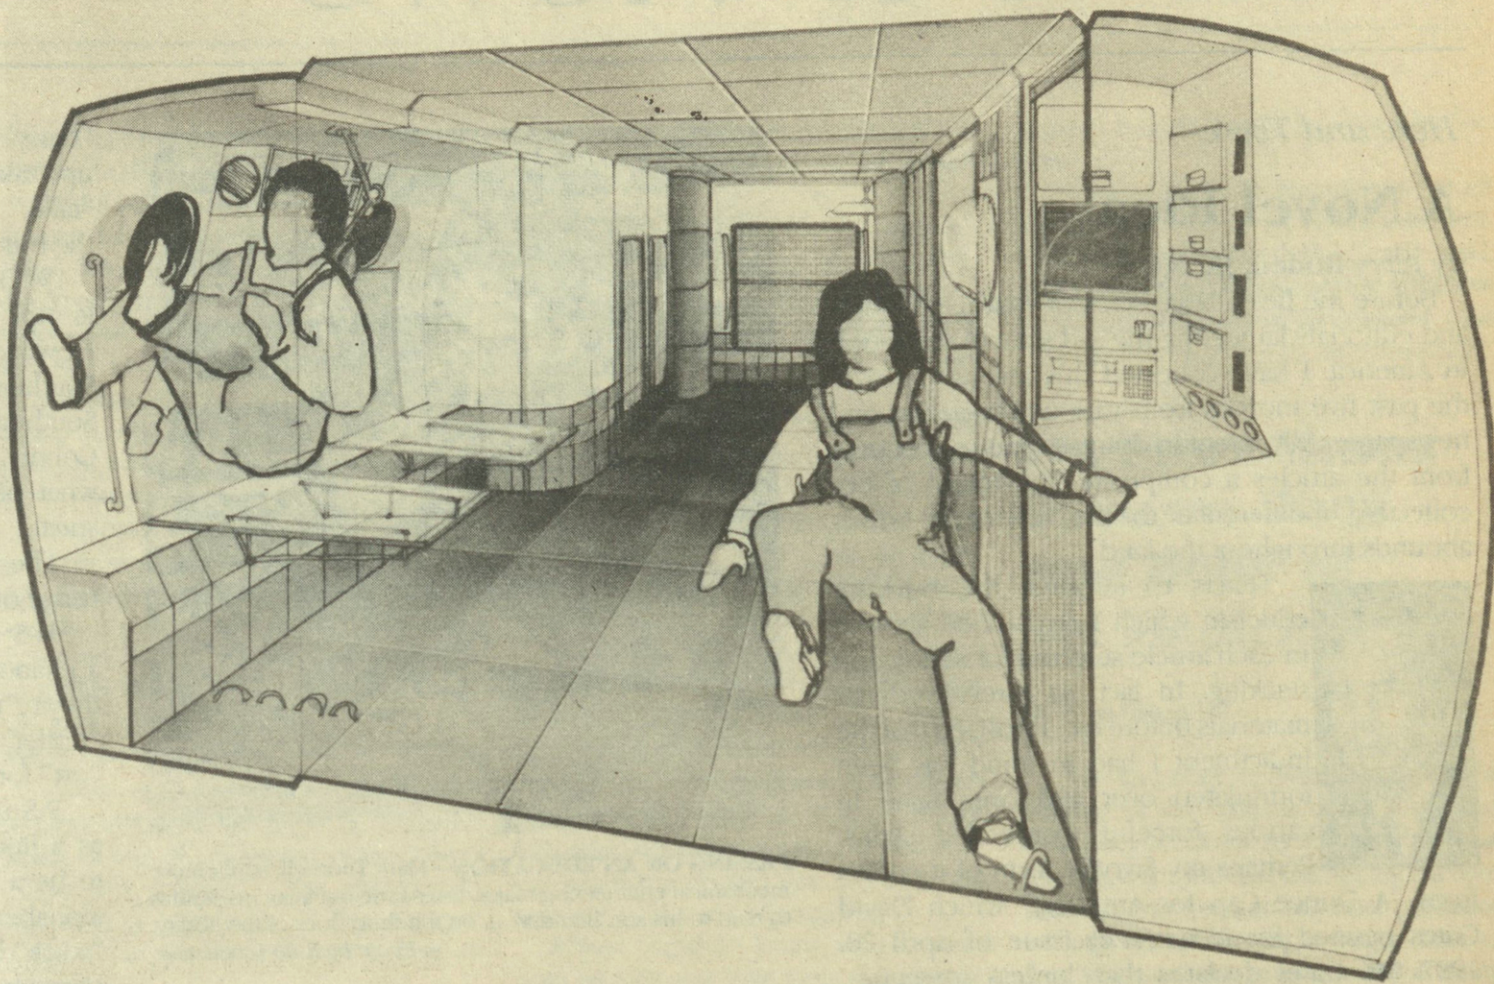

By Robin Meyer '79

When the first astronauts go up to live in space, they may be in an Auburn environment. More than a dozen faculty members from the School of Architecture have been intensely involved in designing the living quarters for up to eight astronauts who may spend as many as 90 days in a space station.

The Auburn professors have been spending much of their out-of-the-classroom time on the project, which reached its first completion date at the end of April. However, it will be several months before the Auburn team learns whether or not its design will be going into space.

The school contracted to design the module with Martin Marietta/Denver Aerospace, which is in competition with Boeing for a NASA contract to build a live-in module for astronauts. "Although the space station may not be built until the 1990's," Professor Wayne Drummond, head of the Department of Architecture and project coordinator, said, "Martin Marietta was particularly interested in Auburn because of the multi-disciplinary team we can offer the project."

Keith McPheeters, Architecture dean and project manager, pointed out that the opportunity for designing the quarters is "not only a chance of a lifetime for any designer, but Auburn was a sensible choice because it is one of the few schools of architecture that offers such a wide variety of disciplines."

DESIGNED FOR SPACE—This conceptual drawing by Auburn School of Architecture faculty shows astronauts in the wardroom (or meeting area) of the habitation module for the future U.S. Space Station. A team of professors from all areas of the School of Architecture are working with Martin Marietta to submit designs for the astronauts living quarters. Martin Marietta is completing for the NASA contract to design and construct the module where astronauts will live in space for up to 90 days.

Consequently, the Departments of Architecture, Building Science, Industrial

Design, and Interior Design (represented on the team by Sheri Schumacher '81) are working within the guidelines that Martin Marietta has given them. Their goal is to design the most physically and psychologically comfortable quarters possible, because, "once the astronauts are up in space," Dean McPheeters said, "there is no going home. We want to enhance the quality of the mission and reduce the amount of stress. We have called in Dr. Peter Harzem, Hudson Professor and head of the Department of Psychology, toward this goal. The need for security and well-being is magnified in space, and we need to design the environment to be as close to home as possible, within a very high-tech area."

Not only is designing for living in space a great and unusual opportunity for those involved in the project, "but it is also quite different from what a designer usually does," according to William C. Bullock '65, head of Industrial Design and project team leader. "Ordinarily, industrial designers design the products that go into the environment. This time, the products that we are designing are the environment; and the environment is the product."

The module is supposed to last for 30 years; therefore the materials that the designers are working with must be durable and must have longevity. "The materials chosen must be lightweight, easy to clean and maintain, convenient and livable," Prof. Bullock explained. "One very important aspect that we must consider," he added, "is microbiological contamination, because it is a closed environment. Therefore, the environment must be easily cleaned."

The living area of the module will be about the size of a mobile home. Although there will be a crew of eight, only four would be in the living quarters at one time. These private crew quarters would include a sleeping area, a galley, a hygiene area, a ward room, an exercise area, and a medical monitoring area.

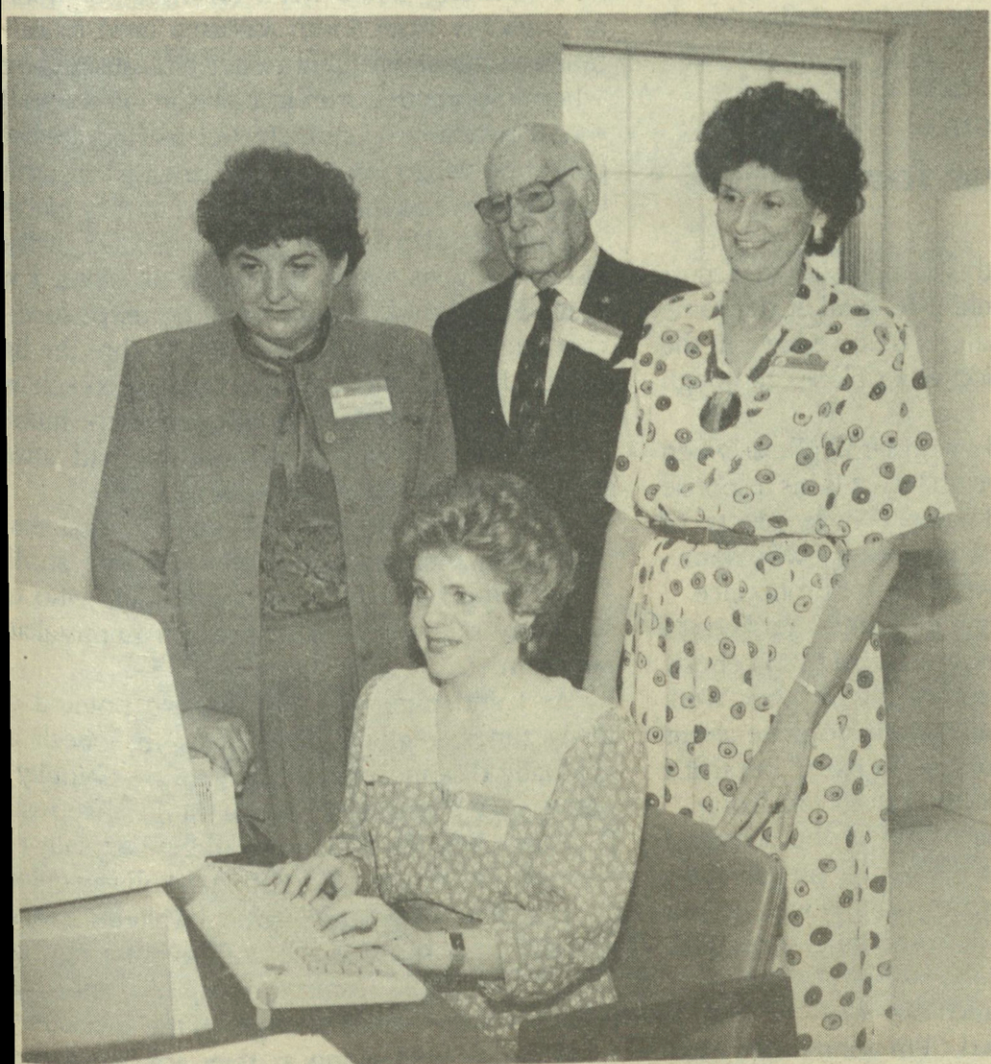

Each day the astronauts would have to be monitored medically and spend an hour exercising because their biological systems are totally different in zero gravity.

Lighting and spaciousness are very important in any environment, Dr. Drummond pointed out. "This is where our architecture and interior design departments come in. Also, we need to establish colors that we use on earth and that would wear well in space."

Industrial Design Assistant Professor Bret Smith said that, "our job in the project is to design the products and hardware equipment to work in the module environment. Also, our role is to figure out how to make the interior work, for instance deciding where to put the partitions, and how to stow them away easily when they are not needed. We need to make the details credible, using the materials and technology acceptable for space and flight."

The industrial designers, he continued, "have to design a handrail so that the astronauts know that it is a handrail, with materials that can be used in abnormal atmosphere and temperatures and can withstand temperature changes."

"NASA has only a certain number of variables that can be used," Prof. Smith added, "and it is not necessary to bring in a lot of brand new materials."

NURSING ADVISORS—Three members of the School of Nursing Advisory Council watch Prof. Charlotte Pitts of the nursing faculty demonstrate how computers are used in the school. On an introductory visit to Auburn, members of the council toured the facilities, heard about research in nursing, and made plans to work for the benefit of Auburn's nursing programs. Pictured left to right are Mavis Halco, Dr. James Naftel '26, and Betty Higginbotham.

Here and There—

A Novel Idea

By Jerry Roden, Jr., '46

Before me lies a large stack of essays, columns, and editorials lamenting the sad state of education in America. I have collected this assortment over the past five months from various magazines and newspapers. My intent in doing so was to construct from the articles a composite indictment of our collective indifference to the ignorance which abounds throughout the land.

Facts to support the burning criticism which I envisioned abound in each article selected for saving and stacking. In fact, as I reviewed the materials before me, I realized that the indictment I had in mind has been formulated over and over again in various forceful words and styles. Perhaps my favorite form of it comes from "A Dunce Cap for America," which David Gates penned for Newsweek's issue of April 20, 1987. Mr. Gates declares that "unless someone . . ." begins to "give a damn . . ., civilization may perish simply because nobody bothered to pass it on."

Every fiber of my being responds positively to that clarion call to action and to the echoes of it that resound in the other articles stacked before me. At this moment, I would enjoy nothing better than letting the echoes roll through a composite of other quotations.

Yet, a still small voice whispers that I have indulged similar desires from time to time throughout the years with no discernible effect. Thus, wisdom dictates a different tack, with the modest hope of a slight gain over past performances.

The notion of a novel turn on the value of education lodged in the back of my mind a few days ago when I read an essay which listed education as one of the top three industries in the New England states. At first the implication of that listing repelled me: I am one of those purists who believe that education contains its own excuse for being without regard for any practical considerations whatsoever. Arguments for improving education to attract industry disturb me, and suggestions of attaining educational excellence for the purpose of "selling Alabama" to outside interests give me nightmares. Hitherto, I have maintained that adequate education would enable us to create any industries needed and to preserve the remaining natural beauties of our state in the process.

So the idea of considering education as an industry was at first distasteful, but then I began to recall facts I have long known: For example, Auburn University provides Lee County its largest payroll, and the University of Alabama at Birmingham long ago outstripped any single corporation in its contribution to the economy of the Magic City. Just think what these universities, other state institutions of higher learning, and our public schools could add to our economy if they were funded at levels requisite for excellence in all teaching and research.

PASSING ON AN EDUCATION—Mark Thornell, sophomore mechanical engineering major, takes time out from his studies to read to his son Brandon, 4, on the third floor of the library.

Perhaps if we made the proper commitment to our schools, colleges, and universities, we would not need to clutter the landscape with the unsightly structures of outside investors and foreign speculators. If education itself did not prove an adequate industrial expansion, it certainly would provide us with the capacity to create the remainder necessary in the most tasteful architecture and manner possible—And while we were reaping these practical benefits, we might make some significant contribution to saving civilization by bothering to pass it on.

Esoterica for Everyone—

Thank Goodness for Dialects

By Bob Sanders '52

Every so often there's this compulsion to discuss and criticize and be thankful for—all at the same time—the diversity of dialects that we have in the South, not even to mention other places, although we may.

Lewis Grizzard coined a wonderful phrase when he said, "God talks like we do." That is his response to Yankees (who, Lord knows, have plenty of speech inconsistencies of their own) who sometimes giggle at the way we phrase or pronounce.

I have known recently transplanted Yankees to break up into small pieces upon hearing somebody say, "I'm fixing..." to do something or other. Well, if a body wanted to be absolutely accurate about the thing, it was more like, "Ah'm fixin," but that's a small point. The big point is that "I'm fixing..." is a perfectly good phrase. One of the accepted meanings of "fix" is "to get ready; prepare." So the next time some smartie pants laughs at you for saying, "I'm fixing" to do something, sneer back at him for his ignorance.

The word "carry" and the way we use it sometimes is also ridiculed. "I'm gonna carry Aunt Mila Ree to the bus station," for instance, will sometimes bring on howls of sarcastic laughter. "Are you gonna pick her up and carry her? Har, har, har, har..." Don't get carried away, sucker.

"Carry" is one (of dozens—have you ever looked up "take" in the dictionary?) of the definitions of "take." Don't be defensive. "Carry" somebody to the bus station all you want to.

What outsiders so often overlook is that the is not "a" southern accent, there are many. However, for most practical purposes, Alabama Southern can be divided into what I call Hillbill Southern, which is what people in, say, Lamar County, speak and Plantation-Southern, which is what people in Benton and Tyler, for example, speak.

The continental divide between the two is the usage of the letter "r."

H-S speakers use them "r's"; they never miss a chance to use one. They even use them when they're not there, as in "pillar" for "pillow," and "holler" for "hollow," and "feller" for "fellow," and "ort" for "ought," etc.

P-S users, on the other hand, know "r's," on as a first letter for words. After that, there seems to be a mental block about the 18th letter of the alphabet. A simple word ("wuid" or "woid") in "work" becomes "wuk" or "woik." Chairs become chay-uhs. Hair becomes hay-uh. "Over there" becomes "ovah they-uh." You get the idea.

Those afflicted with both syndromes share a common hatred of the long "i." It is almost impossible for a southern mouth to arrange itself to make that little sound that Yankees make effortlessly. I've watched them talk. An "i" of the long variety will come out of their mouths as easily as boiled okra can be swallowed (swallered, H-S). That's one skill they have mastered. It may be something in the water up there (or wait, as a teacher from South Alabama used to call much to the amusement of her hillbilly student. When a Southerner tries to make an "i" sound that way, it invariably sounds affected, as if airs are being put on. So we go through life changing tars, arn't fighting fars, and marring down in muddy places.

There are also the delightful little colloquialisms of certain areas within the larger divisions. I was a mite puzzled, upon my first exposure to Opelikeses many, many years ago, before the light finally dawned and I realized that a co-itch was the fellow who ran the football team. In the hillbilly provincialism of my community, I had always imagined that it was a one-syllable word.

One huge misconception among outsiders is that all Southerners talk slowly. Not true at all. I know some born-and-bred Southerners who talk in a very staccato fashion, but still unmistakably Southern.

As I and numerous others have pointed out many times, regional differences in speech are gradually disappearing, what with the ubiquitous network TV. They say the same thing is happening in other countries. While it wouldn't be totally true if everybody sounded like Kathleen Sullivan or Joe Chancellor (NOT, please, Barbara Walters), I would terribly miss hearing the different twangs and accents of people from other regions, and trying to pinpoint the places of origin of the speakers.

If things kept going as they are, we may have to learn Spanish, and Japanese, anyway, to become multi-lingual. Of course I am already bilingual. If you should ever run across a Lamar County Southerner and need a translator, I'm one of the best.

New York Artists Send Show Home To Alabama

By Tomie Dugas '72

"We were just talking one day, and I said, 'Gee, why don't we put together a show of Alabama artists who are in New York and send it to Alabama,'" sculptor Harriet Cloud recounted to explain how the Post Alabama Contemporary Artists show was conceived and found its way to Auburn in January. Harriet, a 1979 Auburn fine arts graduate, curated the show, working for about a year-and-a-half to assemble the artists and arrange the funding.

The Post Alabama Contemporary show featuring 17 former Alabamians opened initially in January 1986 at Phenix City Art Gallery in East Village, New York City, and will travel to the University of Alabama in Birmingham in October 1987. Three members of the group, besides Harriet, are Auburn graduates: William Scott Pfaffman '76, Robert Evans '77, and Doree Albritton '77. In addition, Thornton Willis, the most established artist in the show, attended Auburn in 1957-58.

In assembling artists for the show, Harriet contacted her former schoolmates and other acquaintances from Alabama whom she had met through an earlier job at an art supply business. Almost everyone she approached thought the idea exciting, wanted to become involved, and offered names of others who might be interested.

Harriet particularly enjoyed seeing her Auburn friends while working on the show, because, she pointed out, "you don't really run into each other that often unless you make a big effort." Usually artists in New York City are overwhelmingly busy with their own lives, trying to acquire a balanced schedule of time, money, and space to pursue their artistic careers.

To support her creative efforts, Harriet works in an art gallery as assistant manager of Galeria Joan Prats for four days a week and in her studio the other three days. She notes that, "It's taken me seven years to get in that position...to get the right job and then make enough money and then to find a space."

Harriet works in metal sculpture. She is represented in the show by a photograph of one of her latest pieces entitled "Corrosive System." The photograph documents corrosion of the copper sculpture as salt water circulates over its surface.

Harriet has had her works exhibited in several shows in New York City and has curated a show in Chicago. She went to the Big Apple, which she calls "stimulating, sometimes too stimulating," to work on an MA which she received from Hunter College in 1984.

Scott Pfaffman also came to New York City to attend Hunter College, earning an MA in 1978. He too is a sculptor and has participated in a number of outdoor sculpture installations. In a recent show at Socrates Sculpture Park, he installed a large totem pole piece. The two acrylic paintings he placed in the Post Alabama show, "Untitled Studies for Sculpture," relate to a series of sculptures he did in Chicago. Although Scott is doing well in his medium, he supplements his art income with plumbing jobs.

Doree Albritton, who found New York City to be an attractive challenge after graduation from Auburn, supports herself doing display work for Macy's. Her piece in the show, "Mock Turtle," is a handmade paper form, delicately colored with pigments and is representative of her current work. She has shown in a number of group exhibitions, particularly in New York and Alabama. Unlike other Auburn alumni in the show, she received her BFA in visual design and worked as a designer when she first came to New York City. Although she did quite well in this field, she gravitated toward fine arts and now sells her works in a Soho gallery.

Robert (Robbie) Evans, who received both his BFA and MFA from Auburn, also has a job that relates to his personal artistic career. He is a master lithographer with Styria Studios, Inc., a fine arts printing house. Robbie's own paintings and prints are executed in a photorealistic style, meticulously rendered and rich in detail. His mixed-media painting in the show, "Graffiti X, Collage Series-Graph," was inspired by graffiti he saw on a wall in New York.

Thornton Willis, a New York art luminary for 20 years, is the only former Auburn student to support himself solely with his artwork, although he occasionally teaches. Mr. Willis has had a successful career as an internationally-known artist working in the modernist tradition. He has been featured in one-man exhibitions in Sweden, Switzerland, and France, as well as New York City, Chicago, Boston, and New Orleans among other cities in this country. He received a National Endowment for the Arts fellowship grant in 1980 and a John Guggenheim Memorial fellowship grant in 1978. He has been with Oscarsson Hood Gallery for a number of years.

Although he spent only one year at Auburn, Mr. Willis, whose painting in the exhibit is entitled "Alabama," credits an incident at Auburn with inspiring him to pursue a painting career. As an architecture student here in the Fifties, he saw an art exhibit which affected him greatly and led him to change his major to fine arts.

Harriet also fondly remembers the art exhibits she saw as an Auburn student. "I always appreciated that," she said, explaining that she put together this show to do something for other students, plus "get something going for my own work."

Dr. Powe Shows Students 'Nuts And Bolts' of Vet Medicine

By Dan Shell '87

For Dr. Tom A. Powe, Jr., selected teacher of the year in the College of Veterinary Medicine by the SGA, a day at the office is a full day, indeed. By his own account, Dr. Powe, an associate professor of large animal surgery, averages three to four hours per day in lecture and as many as five or six hours per day on the clinic floor, diagnosing cases and performing lab studies. This time adds up to an excess of 250 hours each year in lecture and more than 1,000 hours in the clinic, showing students the "nuts and bolts" of veterinary medicine.

Dr. Powe began his undergraduate career at the then Alabama Polytechnic Institute in 1954, and finished his veterinary studies at Auburn University in 1961. A product of Coy, a town in Wilcox County, Dr. Powe isn't sure exactly why he chose to go into veterinary medicine: "I was brought up on a farm and knew being a veterinarian was a good profession. I think somehow I realized that, with my background, I wasn't going to be able to go into farming, buy land, and be able to make any money. I had always enjoyed being around animals," he continued, "and I guess I realized it was a good way to enjoy life and make a living at the same time."

After graduation he founded his own practice in Monroeville, where he worked until 1972. The decision to come back to Auburn was a hard one. "I was really busy," says Dr. Powe, "putting everything into my practice and not seeing my family. Also, I realized my daughters were probably not going to take over my practice. At the same time," he continued, "I wanted to get back into the academic atmosphere because there had been many developments in my field and I just wanted to get caught back up. It was a difficult decision," Dr. Powe says, "but my wife and I looked at it as a practical situation and it just weighed toward coming back here."

Mr. Williams encouraged his former student to attend graduate school at Hunter College in New York. "It was really the right school for me—my work made more sense there than anywhere else," Harriet acknowledged.

When prodded for his most memorable or exciting moment as a veterinarian, Dr. Powe reached into his private practice experience and came up with what he called a "most exotic case." In 1968 he was talked into operating on a 69-inch, 9-pound live rattlesnake for a rodeo. He admits that even though a professional snake handler was right there with him, "I was still very nervous. In fact," says Dr. Powe, "in order to keep a reputation I didn't want from spreading, I raised my fee to $500 minimum to work on snakes. And that was when $500 was worth something," he adds with a chuckle.

Dr. Powe's office at McAdory Hall doesn't seem suitable for the most outstanding teacher in the whole school. He and Dr. David McClary share a small office where they have pushed their desks together, apparently to catch the overflow of paperwork, publications, and veterinary paraphernalia characteristic of professional educators striving to give their students the best instruction available. Dr. Powe confesses that his messy desk is a sign of either a "busy or a lazy man, or I guess you could call me a busy, lazy man," he says with a smile.

Dr. Powe has been busy. When he first arrived in Auburn to teach in 1972, another instructor had to miss a quarter and Dr. Powe found himself teaching two 5-hour lecture courses he says "were brand new to me." Now, Dr. Powe teaches all the swine disease courses, offered, some courses in non-infectious diseases in large animals, a service course in the School of Agriculture one quarter a year, and a few graduate courses as needed. Asked which course he enjoys teaching most, Dr. Powe replies that he "enjoys them all."

In response to a question about his philosophy of teaching, Dr. Powe says, as most teachers will, that he wants his students to "understand rather than memorize." He feels it's important to direct his students through a learning process. "I want my students to treat each problem like a puzzle," says Dr. Powe, "applying information rather than acting like a computer." He tries to leave a lot of room in his lectures for questions and student participation, which make him feel he's accomplished more. But, the main difference in Dr. Powe's field and most others is the literal life and death consequences of the clinical lab experience. "After all," says Dr. Powe, "we're dealing with a live situation, not a canned one."

Dr. Powe lives in Auburn with his wife, Linda Albritton '59. One of his hobbies is tending a small garden. He also likes flyfishing and following Auburn's football and basketball teams closely. He and his wife have two daughters; Beth, 24, is married and living in South Carolina after attending Auburn, and Kathy, 21, is a senior in Auburn's School of Nursing. He describes Auburn as a "nice place, one I've been able to recommend as a place to raise a family." And he feels one of Auburn's most enduring qualities is that of a college town still remaining conservative.

A man who admittedly doesn't like to draw attention to himself, Dr. Powe says he was surprised at receiving the award. "I never had any idea I'd be named," Dr. Powe says. "After all, there are more than 100 teachers out here at the Vet School!" Dr. Powe prefers to gain satisfaction in different ways than receiving awards. "It's always rewarding to see someone grasp a new concept," says Dr. Powe, "possibly through something I might show them."

New Professor Compares Industrial Management To Academics

By Karen Price '88

A recipient of the Student Government Association's 1986 Outstanding Teacher award, Dr. C. William Roos, an associate professor who teaches chemical engineering classes, has been at Auburn only three years. A 32-year veteran of industrial employment with the Monsanto Co., Dr. Roos retired in 1982 as director of technological administration. "I take teaching pretty seriously, maybe because I'm new at it. I try to bring together the theory and my practical experience. It just comes naturally and the students seem to like it," Dr. Roos offers as an explanation for the award.

Although Dr. Roos worked in an industrial environment for many years he had retained yearnings for academic employment since his graduation from Washington University in 1951. He initially considered a career in academics but decided he would first gain some practical work experience before attempting to teach others. Yet, once involved in industry, Dr. Roos became content and remained, but the idea of teaching never left his mind.

When he first started working at Monsanto, Dr. Roos taught part-time at Washington University. "By teaching a course, I really had to learn the material. When I tried to explain it to someone, I really had to understand it." And after working in industry and gaining more experience he felt more qualified to communicate the important practical aspects of the theories they learned. "After working in industry all these years, it is very satisfying to know I still have something to offer the people who have yet to face all that."

Consequently, upon his retirement in 1982, he began the search for a university at which to launch a new career as a professor. Along the way, he and Auburn crossed paths. "Auburn was looking for someone with industrial experience, and I was looking for a school in the Southeast. My family had driven through the South on vacations and I had intended to retire here. I've never regretted the move." Originally from Belleville, Ill., a small town 30 miles from St. Louis, Dr. Roos enjoys Auburn's small town atmosphere.

In addition to the SGA award, Dr. Roos has collected two other awards for teaching. A student and faculty committee awarded him the 1986 Fred H. Pumphrey Teaching Award for Excellence which the College of Engineering bestows annually, and the chemical engineering students selected him as the 1986 Outstanding Instructor in chemical engineering.

Although he obviously made the switch from industry to academia successfully, the transition involved more time than Dr. Roos had initially anticipated. The textbooks today convey vastly different information than the textbooks used 30 years ago when Dr. Roos graduated. "The fundamentals come back pretty quick, but to translate what I know into the language that is being used today just takes longer," Dr. Roos explains.

Another aspect of the university atmosphere that Dr. Roos adjusted to was the working environment itself. Having worked in an organization with a large backup staff for so long, the acclimation to a smaller staff took a little time. "Even though we have secretaries, the amount of secretarial support is less. I have to do a lot of things myself like Xeroxing, when the machine breaks down I try to fix it myself. These things aren't necessarily disagreeable it was just an adjustment I had to make." Dr. Roos compares being a professor to being an entrepreneur. A professor and an entrepreneur must perform most of the necessary functions inherent with success. "It is up to that person to run his own show, and that's good," Dr. Roos explains.

Dr. Roos has learned to appreciate many facets of the Chemical Engineering Department in his short time at Auburn. The first characteristic involves the people of the department. Dr. Roos thinks that people work well together, get along well together, and help each other although they work in separate areas. Having had a fair amount of interaction with other universities in his work at Monsanto, he thinks this quality of cooperation is uncommon. "Other universities have individual people who are doing their thing and they don't want to be bothered too much with the rest of what is going on. Here people are doing their thing and there is a certain sense of camaraderie."

Another aspect of the Chemical Engineering Department he enjoys is the relationship between faculty and students. He says, "there seems to be a friendliness that has built up with the chemical engineering students and the faculty. It is not a we-versus-they sort of thing."

However, certain problems do exist. (Continued on page 8)

Recent Retirees

'Some Kind of Teacher'—Prof. Brittin Retires

By Taylor Littleton '51

Long and distinguished periods of faculty service have assigned a distinctive and reassuring continuity to life in the Department of English, and the retirement in December of Associate Professor Ruth Lowe Brittin brought to a close one of the most memorable of these important associations. It may be the longest one, too, for Ruth began that association as a new instructor in 1942. And though she did not return to the Department on a continuous basis until 1970, she developed in that interim a diverse career of teaching and study which included three years at Duke, where she initiated her pervasive scholarly interest in the social and literary meanings of violence in southern literature; three at Tuskegee Institute; and, in company with husband Norman, four at the University of Puerto Rico and one at La Laguna University in the Canary Islands.

In the midst of all this, Ruth also completed a twelve year administrative career, serving 1951-62 as assistant to the dean of the Graduate School. The University at large should note this with appreciation, for these were the formative years of Auburn's graduate activity as it was recognized and considerably strengthened after the war, a time when many new programs, including the first doctoral ones, were added and when a diverse population of graduate students was enrolling. The firm grasp of organization and sensible procedure which she brought to her duties there, together with her sensitivity to the need for high academic standards, made her during those years an excellent liaison between the Graduate School office and hundreds of graduate faculty and students.

But it is as teacher that Ruth has made her most important mark: on her colleagues, as one who in the integrity and conduct of her professional life and in her open, forceful and absolutely collegial style of discourse has given to the academic title "professor" the meaning we all wish to achieve; and on the thousands of students, some of Auburn's best, who have marched in the end, humbly through her classes in literature, advanced composition, and innovative topics, encountering there her uncompromising standards of quality and expectation and yet too a considerable tolerance for ideas bravely advanced in the heat of classroom discussion. And it should be said in connection with her teaching that no faculty member has been more giving with her time to students needing and seeking her advice, and no faculty home has through the years been more open and hospitable to student visitors than that of Ruth and Norman.

Whether we like to admit it or not, students often say it best; and one was recently overheard, leaving her office, to remark in that spent tone of grudging admiration which comes from re-writing and re-writing again an essay under a watchful eye until some semblance of order and coherence appears: "That woman is some kinda teacher!" Some kinda teacher, indeed—and those of us who will in the new year miss her quick step in the hallway ("You can get a lot of exercise this way!") and daily be much the poorer from the absence of her vigorous and generous presence, might well complete the judgment, correcting of course, as she would insist, the colloquial misspelling: "Some kind of teacher! Some kind of colleague! Some kind of woman!"

Dr. Douty Retiring But Still Stressing Importance of Posture, Self-Image

By Fowler Dugger, Jr.

As a young teacher during the 1940s, Helen Douty noticed that many of her students had the wrong mental image of themselves. Perfectly normal students, she noticed, considered themselves too fat or too skinny.

Her observations developed as, armed with bachelor's and master's degrees from Cornell University, she began teaching clothing, or, as she refers to it with a quick smile, "garment engineering."

"When you stop to think of it," she explains, "most garments hang from the shoulders. That means you must consider both posture and body contours in making clothes that fit well." However, neither the garment industry nor many individuals seem to consider that fact, she observes. "Perhaps because clothing construction is an ancient art, we are so slow to change or perhaps it's simply that we take clothes for granted." And she thinks the fashion world erred seriously when it turned its back on the use of darts, or tapered tucks, "an invaluable asset in obtaining a good fit."

During a career which now has spanned more than 40 years, Dr. Douty sought ways to help students overcome this problem of mental image, often affecting not only the fit of their clothing but their outlook on life. The work will continue, she says, despite her recent retirement after 23 years of teaching in the Consumer Affairs Department of the School of Home Economics.

It was after earning her Ph.D. at Florida State and coming to Auburn in 1962 that Dr. Douty decided to make this interest her specialty. Much of her time outside the classroom has been devoted to the use of a technique for which she coined the phrase "graphic somatry." In this technique she photographs the subject's silhouette on a screen having an overlaid grid of one-inch squares—a "human-scale graph paper." The resulting photo of a silhouette, frontal, and side views against the grid background is one of the means used to measure and classify such body characteristics as weight, shape, and posture. The technique helps people overcome false impressions they may have about themselves, she says, adding that "it's a great motivator to posture improvement!"

"Photographs contain extraneous material which distracts most of us. A silhouette forces us to pay attention to our physical shape," she continues. In the classroom and short courses, she uses graphic somatry to help students develop the ability to make or to select and alter clothes that enhance their appearance.

As the years have sped by, Dr. Douty increasingly has become interested in the role of posture in physical and mental health. Retirement, she said, will give her more time to devote to what she admits has become a personal crusade. Dr. Douty doesn't plan to give up teaching entirely, though. She will be teaching continuing education courses in posture improvement while she continues her research, writings, and lectures advocating a sustained program of education and exercise to develop good posture.

SOME KIND OF TEACHER—Over the years, many students have gotten to know Ruth Lowe Brittin '40 well enough to realize how appropriate it is for the English professor to have her retirement photograph taken outside.

She admits to some frustrations. "People accept the role of exercise in muscle development but are reluctant to link good posture with balanced muscle development. Only recently," she says, "have I found one book that has an organized, preventive approach to good posture, including specific exercises to help achieve it—and it was published in Sweden!"

Once known among her colleagues as something of a world traveler, Dr. Douty confesses to having become a "workaholic" in the past decade. Also neglected have been hobbies of photography and tennis. While sometimes frustrated, she also finds satisfaction in her research, including trying to make her graphic somatry equipment readily portable. That, she says, would help her in trying to win wider acceptance of her ideas. Pursuit of such acceptance will keep her retirement years busy. Achieving some degree of acceptance would make them truly satisfying.

Auburn's First Female Vet Prof Retires

By Roy Summerford '73

Marie Hall Attleberger '47, who was the first female veterinarian on the faculty at Auburn University, ended her 39-year Auburn career on Sept. 30.

Dr. Attleberger, who organized and directed the bacteriology and mycology laboratory in the Department of Microbiology, assumed the rank of emerita professor upon her retirement.

The Veterinary Medicine professor began her Auburn career as a graduate assistant in 1947, shortly after becoming the second woman to obtain a doctor of veterinary medicine from Auburn. She became an instructor in 1949, obtained her master's from Auburn in 1951, and stayed on as a member of the Veterinary Medicine faculty. She later obtained a doctorate in microbiology from the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

Although her career began in what had previously been a male field, Dr. Attleberger said she never had any doubts about her decision to be a veterinary scientist and educator. "It was something I wanted to do, and I didn't see any reason why I couldn't do it," she said.

Since 1957, much of her research and teaching has been in mycology, which involves the identification and treatment of fungal infections in domestic animals. The work has included development and expansion of courses in the subject area for veterinary students.

Much of the scientific knowledge about fungal infections has been developed in the past 30 years, and Dr. Attleberger has both contributed to it and strived to include the growing body of knowledge in the preparation of veterinary students.

"Our students are as well trained in medical mycology as any students going into veterinary medicine in the United States," she said. "The hot, humid climate in the South makes it necessary."

Dr. Attleberger was named Woman Veterinarian of the Year in 1984 during the American Veterinary Medical Association convention, and the Auburn chapter of Omega Tau Sigma veterinary fraternity presented its Zeta Award to her this year in recognition of her work.

The retirement decision was sparked last spring by a campus seminar on steps toward retirement. After attending the session, she began making retirement plans, which include consulting work and more time with husband Ray Attleberger in their hobby of exhibiting American Saddlebred and Standardbred road horses.

Ag Prof. King Retires After 40 Years of Teaching and Research

When Dr. Cooper King retired as a professor in Auburn University's College of Agriculture and the Alabama Agricultural Experiment Station, he left behind a 34-year legacy of successful teaching and research. He also left his mark university-wide, having served as chairman of the University Senate and president of the General Faculty.

Dr. King, a native of Leighton, first came to Auburn as an undergraduate student, LONG CAREER COMES TO END—Veterinary Professor Marie Attleberger '47 is congratulated by Dean J.T. Vaughan of the College of Veterinary Medicine upon her appointment as an emerita professor, following her retirement from Auburn.

FAREWELL—Dr. Cooper King, who recently retired after 34 years on the Auburn faculty, is shown taking a last look at AU Centennial tall fescue. He was a member of the Alabama Agricultural Experiment Station research team that unraveled the mystery of fescue toxicity in beef cattle, and hence the development of AU Centennial—one of the several ways developed to combat the malady.

earning a bachelor's in ag education and a master's in agronomy and crop production in 1952. He headed the Experiment Station's grain crops variety testing program for nearly 10 years, prior to completing his Ph.D. at North Carolina State University in 1964.

His role in the Alabama Agricultural Experiment Station's effort to solve the fescue toxicity problem is a classic example of how research should work. In 1974, working in cooperation with an animal scientist and a forage breeder, Dr. King established the phalarisgrass and Kentucky 31 paddocks at the Black Belt Substation in Marion Junction, which led to the discovery of the fungal endophyte that causes fescue toxicity in cattle. Subsequent research produced an endophyte resistant variety, AU Centennial, and enough answers to provide cattlemen with the information needed to eradicate the problem by 1980. Unfortunately, the high cost of re-establishing fungus-free pastures, combined with depressed cattle prices, has prevented many producers from doing so.

"Many people were involved in the battle against fescue toxicity," Dr. King commented, "I was just one of several researchers. But using a conservative figure of 50 cents per pound for beef, eradicating fescue toxicity from every acre of Kentucky 31 in the Southeast could have saved cattlemen over a billion dollars since 1980," he concluded.

During the same period, Dr. King was working with ag economists and others to develop economically feasible alternative fuel sources from field crops. At that time, he recalled, "the Arab oil embargo was at its height, and we didn't know whether or not we would have enough fuel for our cars or factories."

In the short term, Auburn researchers produced up to 200 gallons of fuel per acre of sweet sorghum at a cost of about $1.60 per gallon. Sorghum required good farmland, so for a more practical long term solution, Dr. King worked with several different legumes and grasses grown on lands not suitable for row crops. (There are 50 million acres of such land in the South.) "I hope we never have to resort to producing industrial grade fuels from biomass," the former Auburn researcher commented, "but if we have to, at least we will know our options."

Despite his success as a researcher, Dr. King says his greatest achievements as an Auburn faculty member have come in the classroom. "The kids keep you young and on your toes," he noted. In addition to teaching both undergraduate and graduate courses, he has been faculty adviser to several organizations, and has been major professor to more than 20 master's and doctoral students.

Although he is retired from Auburn University, Dr. King began a second career as a professor at Tennessee Technological University in Cookeville, Tennessee, where the bulk of his work will be teaching, but he also will have research and extension responsibilities.

to exist. Dr. Roos considers the biggest problem to be the general lack of funds, particularly in the maintenance budget: money to keep existing equipment in good repair and running efficiently. But he does not think the shortage is unique to his department. The Chemical Engineering Department, Roos adds, is blessed with a good deal of industrial support for the undergraduate program to buy new equipment.

Other problems include a lack of space. Headquartered in the old Ross Chemical Building, the chemical engineering students are scattered around with labs and classes in four or five buildings. Another difficulty involves making plans for the future. With the uncertainty of resources, plans made for six months advance cannot be counted on to come through.

Now 62, Dr. Roos plans to retire someday from teaching and likes the Auburn atmosphere well enough that he will probably stay in town. An avid amateur radio operator for 20 years, he recently completed setting up all his equipment in Auburn. He and his wife, Liz, also a chemical engineer, enjoy sailing their boat on Lake Martin. "We enjoy the climate, the people, the weather, the lake, and the land and are glad we're here."

Baseball Team Sweeps Gators, Takes 1st Place

Auburn's baseball team rose to the challenge of "the biggest series we've had since coming to Auburn," according to Coach Hal Baird. The 11-2, 7-3, and 9-5 wins over the Florida Gators on the weekend of April 10-11 gave Auburn an SEC record of 11-4 and an overall record of 29-10 at press time.

In the opening game of the Saturday twi-night doubleheader, senior right-hander Mark Chapman (8-1) allowed five hits and came within one out of a shutout before allowing the two Gator runs. In the second game, catcher Jeff Livesey's two-run homer helped pitcher Stacy Jones run his record to 6-1 as the Tigers took advantage of poor Gator fielding to place runners on, then move them around with well-timed hits by first baseman Frank Thomas, and third sacker Kevin Henry, who had six RBIs during the series.

The series ended Sunday during an afternoon game at Plainsman Park when Auburn broke open a 4-4 tie with five runs in the bottom of the eighth inning to send the Gators, who had been leading the SEC going into the series, reeling back to Gainesville. Third baseman Steve Burroughs led off the eighth with a single, then advanced to third on a sacrifice and a groundout. Shortstop Kevin Henry singled to score Burroughs, breaking the tie, and then catcher Jeff Livesey drilled a two-run homer over the left field fence to increase the lead to three and effectively snuff out the Gators. Relief ace Gregg Olson lifted his record to 6-1 while pitching one-and-a-third innings.

Auburn's SEC fortunes didn't begin so well, however. After taking two of three games at Ole Miss, the Tigers travelled to Georgia where they dropped three straight in Athens, scoring only eight runs in the 23-inning series (two seven-inning games for a doubleheader and a nine-inning game the following day). The following weekend, Auburn performed the impossible at Mississippi State when the Tigers swept three from the Bulldogs—the first time any team had swept a series in Starkville since 1978. Olson picked up the win in relief in the first game, then Stacy Jones starred in the other two, winning the second game as a starter, and coming on in the late innings of a 15-inning marathon third game to get another win in relief.

The Vanderbilt Commodores visited Auburn the following weekend. After a close 3-2 victory in the first game with Chapman getting the win, Auburn's bats boomed in the next two games, posting 8-4 and 14-7 wins. Since losing the three straight games to Georgia, Auburn has been one of the hottest teams in the conference, going 14-4, with only two losses each to Samford and Clemson blemishing its record.

In addition to its sterling record and a No. 17 ranking by Baseball America, Auburn also has many players near the top of the league in both offensive and defensive categories. First baseman Frank Thomas, a refugee from the grind of spring football practice, is enjoying himself at the top of the SEC home run derby with 15 round trippers. He's also just off the pace in the RBI chase with 45, good enough to tie for third place. But power isn't the only forte for the freshman; he's also batting sixth overall in the league with a .380 average, just behind teammate Rock Wilson's mark of .383. Other offensive performers include infielders Kevin Henry, ninth overall at .373, and Tony Haney, 11th at .370.

Defensively, pitcher Mark Chapman's eight wins tie him for second best in the conference, and Gregg Olson's and Stacy Jones' six wins apiece are tied for third best. Also, Olson's stellar earned run average of only 1.30 is third best in the league, and Jones' 3.12 ERA is good for ninth. Perhaps the most telling defensive statistic is the team ERA, which at 4.33 is almost a run less than last year.

Lady Tigers Fall To Tennessee In Mideast Regional NCAA Finals

Coach Joe Ciampi's hopes for a trip to the Final Four were dashed March 21 in Knoxville when his second-ranked Lady Tigers were thrashed 77-61 by the Tennessee Lady Vols. However, Auburn ended the season in the top eight with a best-ever 31-2 record.

Playing on its home court before 7,533 fans, Tennessee proved too much for Ciampi's squad. The Lady Vols shot 50 percent from the field, and 80.7 percent from the free throw line. Auburn, on the other hand, shot from the Deepfreeze, hitting just 39.3 percent from the field, and a paltry 50 percent from the line.

PLAY CALLING—Coach Joe Ciampi sends in a play to his Lady Tigers, whose efforts came up short against the Tennessee Lady Vols. Auburn lost the Mideast Regional 77-61.

ALMOST CAUGHT FLATFOOTED—Senior rightfielder Trey Gainous beats the pickoff-throw to first base. As of April 19, Gainous led the team in stolen bases with 17.

Senior Helene Baroody led the Auburn squad with 16 points, followed by sophomore center Vickie Orr with 13 points. Senior forward Charlene Thomas had eight rebounds. But these figures dim in comparison with Tennessee superlatives. Bridgette Gordon, a Lady Vol sophomore forward, penetrated the Auburn defense for 33 points, along with 10 rebounds. And Sheila Frost and Karla Horton contributed in reserve roles. Frost had 15 points and 13 rebounds, and Horton added 13 points.

Auburn held Tennessee scoreless for the first 4:43 of the game, but the Lady Vols were up 34-31 at the half. Ciampi's squad went ahead by three in the opening minutes of the second half, but with 16:54 left, Tennessee went ahead for good.

The Lady Vols' adept offense put Auburn in foul trouble early in the second half—junior center Sharon Stewart fouled out, and Vickie Orr and junior guard Diann McNeil played the rest of the game with four fouls each. Auburn had several opportunities to play catch-up, but ice-cold foul shooting prevented a comeback.

The Tennessee win was the first one of three meetings between the schools this year. Auburn whipped the Lady Vols 75-69 in regular-season play, and handed Tennessee a 102-96 defeat in the semi-finals of the SEC Tournament in Albany, Ga.

Lady Netters Head To SEC Tourney

Auburn's women's tennis team closed out its regular season April 18 and 20 on a good note by turning back the Lady Tide of Alabama 5-4 on Saturday, then beating Birmingham Southern 6-3 the following Monday. A forfeit win against Ole Miss later in the week gave Auburn a 20-7 overall record and a 4-5 slate in the SEC.

Kristen Overton, Kim Brannon, and Sandi Irwin all registered singles wins over Alabama, and partners Sue Watt and Irwin, and Kim Olsen and Overton took doubles matches from the Tide. Against Birmingham Southern, Coach Al Parks '52 juggled his lineup allowing Claudia Steffen, Kim Brannon, Robin Sharp, and Jenny Green to all claim singles matches.

At the Women's SEC Championships in Lexington Ky., on April 24-25, the lady netters managed just two singles victories in the opening round of play, while the other four singles players and three doubles teams lost in the first round. Sue Watt scored a 6-1, 6-1 win over DeDe Dunkle of Tennessee, then lost 6-2, 6-2 to Florida's Denise Dayan after winning the opening set 6-3. Kim Brannon defeated another Tennessee player, Angie Kreis, 6-0, 6-3 in the initial round, but then fell 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 to Lisa Apany of Georgia in the quarterfinals.

Men's Tennis Ranked 25th In Nation

Auburn's men's tennis team finally grabbed its first SEC win of the season April 17 when the Tigers ripped the Mississippi State Bulldogs 7-2 on the strength of five of six singles match wins. Led by Marcel van der Merwe, who scored a 1-6, 6-4, 6-2 win over Minnea Nastase, one of the top players in the nation, Auburn's only singles loss came when No. 6 freshman Tay Robinson was defeated 6-7, 2-6. The day before, Auburn avenged a previous loss against the University of Southwest Louisiana by pulling out a close 5-4 win. The match came down to the doubles competition, and No. 1 doubles team van der Merwe and Kyle Anderson managed a 7-6, 2-6, 7-6 win to seal the victory. Singles winners included van der Merwe, Pat Cassidy, Rockie Mason, and Ian Russell.

Coach Hugh Thomson's Tigers, sporting a 17-16 overall and 1-5 SEC record, were heading into a crucial SEC series at press time. Upcoming matches against Alabama, Georgia, and Ole Miss, all in two days, will be a critical warmup for the SEC Championships on May 8-10 in Gainesville, Fla. While Auburn is ranked 25th nationally, Georgia will be the highest ranked team Auburn will face at 4th. Also, Alabama is 19th and Ole Miss 26th.

Women Golfers Finish 7th at Paladin Tourney

The Lady Tiger golf team finished seventh out of a ten-team field at the three-day Lady Paladin Invitational held April 10-12 in Greenville, S.C., and hosted by Furman University. Coach Bud Marsee was pleased with his squad's showing, noting that most of the teams finishing ahead of Auburn are ranked in the Top 25.

Auburn shot a 309 final round to help keep its 37th national ranking, with sophomores Margaret Platt and Diana Miles leading the way for the Tigers. "Learning to shoot in tournaments comes from practicing and experience," said Marsee. "Our women make up a young team with little tournament experience."

At press time, the lady linksters were heading to the Women's Southern Intercollegiate Tournament on April 24-26 in Athens, Ga., which features 11 of the top 25 teams in the nation. Following the WSIT, Auburn will compete in the SEC Championships at Callaway Gardens on May 8-10.

Men Tracksters Sweep Triangular and Easter Meets

The men's track team scored a "team victory," according to Coach Mel Rosen after Auburn scored in every event except the pole vault at the Easter Invitational April 18. The meet, originally scheduled at the University of Georgia, was held at the Wilbur Hutsell Track because of construction at Georgia's facility.

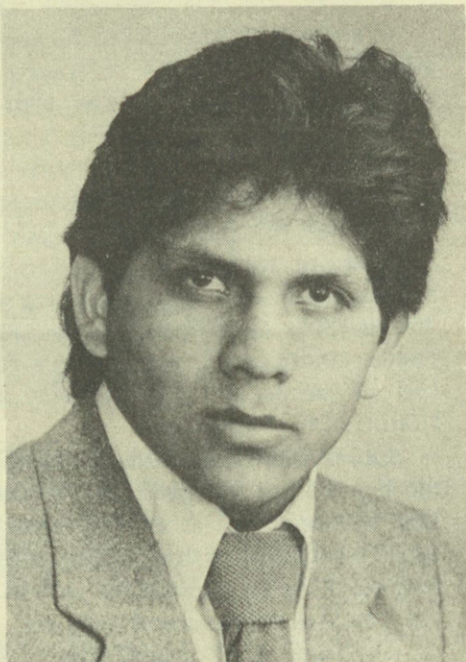

The men's team finished with 76.5 points, six better than the second-place Georgia Bulldogs. Northwestern University took third place with 29 points, and Troy State University finished last with a 19-point effort.

Auburn placed first, second, and third in the 800-meter run. Mark Rabush won the event, followed by Sammie Johnson and Mitt Fulmer. Brian Jaeger took first place in the 5,000-meter event, and freshman Rob Shoaf won the 5,000-meter run.

Sidney Reed finished first in the high hurdles, and shotputter and discus-thrower Rick Hayden placed second in his events. Boris Goins, Tim Martin, Daron Council, and Clifton Campbell took the 400-meter relay, and Council also won the 200-meter dash, finishing in just 21.12 seconds.

Three weeks earlier in the season, the men's team hosted a Triangular Meet and scored 107 points to finish way ahead of North Carolina's 55 and Indianapolis' 24. Appalachian State had originally been scheduled to participate in the meet, but its men's team was involved in an auto accident and couldn't make it. North Carolina finished with 55 points and Indianapolis 24. The men totally dominated the meet, winning 13 of the 18 events to help account for the lopsided score. Also, Rob Shoaf's 14:28.70 time in the 5000-meter run qualified him for the Junior TAC Championships in June.

Jose Rocha

Rocha Top NCAA Diver; Theobald Named Coach of the Year

Sophomore diver Jose Rocha captured the one-meter diving competition at the NCAA Division I Swimming Championships held at Austin, Tex., on April 2-4. Rocha and Mike Wantuck of Ohio State battled for the championship in both the one and three-meter events, but Wantuck jumped out to a 26-point lead with his last dive from three meters and Rocha had to settle for second in the three meter. Rocha's mentor, head diving coach Rick Theobald, added icing to the cake when he was announced as Diving Coach of the Year. In only his third year with the Tigers, Theobald earned the respect of his fellow coaches who voted on the honor.

While Rocha took the top individual honors for the weekend, Auburn's men's swimming team finished its season tied with Tennessee for 14th in the nation, scoring 69 points in the three-day competition. Junior Rod Bowman led Auburn scorers as he finished eighth in the 100-meter butterfly on Friday and sixth in the 200-meter butterfly on Saturday. The 400-meter medley relay team of Bowman, Steve Farmer, Mark Canterbury, and Steve O'Neil finished 13th on Thursday with a time of 3:18.76.

Men's Golf Ranked 9th In Southeastern District

Coming off an eighth-place finish at the Jackson Invitational in Jackson, Miss., Auburn's men's golf team heads to the Chris Schenkel Invitational in Statesboro, Ga., on April 23-26 as this issue goes to press.

In Jackson, Gary Emmons led the Tigers with a 219 total to finish 13th, as the team shot an overall 886. He was joined by teammates Wes Tuck, 23rd, Jim Curran, 28th, Dean Refram, 32nd, and Jody Berklich, 39th. LSU shot an overall 855 to win the tournament. "I felt good about our play this tournament," said Coach Mike Griffin, "we shot one of our best overall scores of the year, and our final round on Sunday was one of our best ever."

In Statesboro at the Schenkel Invitational, Jim Curran, Gary Emmons, Jody Berklich, Wes Tuck, and Mike Arasin will represent the Tigers and will be competing against members of such nationally ranked teams as Oklahoma, Wake Forest, Clemson, and several SEC teams. Auburn finished 10th at Statesboro last year, and Griffin said he hopes his team will repeat the performance.

Ranked ninth in the Southeast District of the NCAA, Auburn is behind SEC teams Ole Miss and Georgia, who are ranked fifth and sixth. The top four teams in each district earn automatic bids to the NCAA Championships, and Auburn has a chance to gain some ground on the Rebels and Bulldogs in the SEC Championships held May 14-17 in Florence.

Women Tracksters Finish 2nd in Triangular, 1st In Easter Meet

In women's action, the lady tracksters also took the Easter Invitational, finishing with 66 points. The final scorings left Georgia with 54 points, Northwestern with 40 points, and Troy State with 14 points.

Rosalind Council (who won the high hurdles) took second place in the 100 and 200-meter dashes. Kelly McDonnell finished third in the 1,500-meter event, and Brenda Malinauskas, Joni Mooney, and Emily Spaulding took first, third, and fourth in the 5,000-meter run.

Sissy Costner scored an Auburn record high jump to win the event, and long jumper Brenda McDonald won her event with an 18-foot, 10-inch effort.

At the earlier Triangular Meet, the Auburn ladies' track team placed second with 42 behind North Carolina. Appalachian State rounded out the field with 40 points. UNC's 97 points were good enough to win the meet, in which they won 11 of the 17 events. However, Brenda McDonald captured the win in the long jump with a distance of 19' 4 1/4", Rosalind Council won the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 14.05, and Kim Burton had a winning time of 1:02.53 in the 400-meter hurdles.

The men's team, coached by Mel Rosen has captured first place at the Tiger Invitational and Triangular meets this season. Coach Lee Gower's lady trackster also took first place at the Tiger Invitational. Both teams will participate in the Penn Relays April 24-25, and the A-Day Invitational May 2 before the Southeastern Conference Championships May 14-17.

Crenshaw County Adopts Aubie

By Cheryl Duke

The Crenshaw County Auburn club held the second annual picnic to support Aubie on campus Nov. 15, three hours prior to the kick-off of the Auburn-Georgia game. The support program began two years ago after Tim and Linda Pearson talked with the then Aubie, Jack Clark, after the 1985 A-Day football game. They realized his desperate need for new uniforms and the trouble of finding the means to purchase them; so they proceeded to relay this message back to the concerned members of the Crenshaw County Club.

Jim Purdue, with the agreement of the other members, decided to take immediate action. He talked with Dr. Foster Laumer, the cheerleader sponsor, about the idea of their club instigating a program to raise funds to support Aubie. Contributions for an exclusive photo of Aubie outside of Jordan-Hare Stadium raised two thousand dollars, but the fifty member club knew, especially after purchasing two uniforms, that they needed help from others in order to support Aubie.

The creation of the Aubie Foster Parents, set up through the Auburn University Foundation, started a new program designed so that anyone who loves Aubie can do something for him. The Crenshaw County Club drew up official legal papers of adoption and had them processed through a judge. They then invited the cheerleaders and Auburn down to present Aubie with a check and make their adoption of him public. This year is actually the charter year for the Foster Parents program. Next year should bring more supporters from other clubs and concerned individuals and turn out to be the "kick-off" of the program.

Certificates with the Auburn seal and President Martin's signature will be given to contributors to recognize their help. "Pins that read 'My son is Aubie' will probably be out next year, also," says Jim Purdue. "To the Crenshaw Club and me, Aubie means the remembrance of our good times at Auburn, as well as the personification of the present students."

Because Aubie is a relatively new tradition, Mr. Purdue feels more people need to know of his need and besides starting the support in the Crenshaw County club, he has talked with the Delta County club. Anyone can become an Aubie Foster Parent. The minimum annual membership contribution, which is tax deductible, is ten dollars and checks should be made out to the Auburn University Foundation restricted to the Aubie Foster Parents Fund, and sent to 116 Foy Union, Auburn University, 36849.

HOUSING FOR THE RURAL POOR—This model of a "simple yet elegant" dwelling won Samuel Mockbee '74 of the architectural firm Mockbee, Coker, Howorth in Jackson, Miss., the first award for architectural design in the 34th Annual Progressive Architecture Award program. His firm, asked by its client the United Way Agency to design three dwellings for families living in substandard homes in Madison County, Miss., strove to demonstrate what can be done in family living situations that often look hopeless. This house uses simple materials available in the area and can be constructed by on-the-job trainees of the YMCA. The Progressive Architecture jury was unanimous in its praise of the architect's skill in producing designs that "absolutely appropriate for the use and the place."
